Looking for a cheap and green alternative to the cleaning products on supermarket shelves?

Plenty of people swear by vinegar. It's certainly inexpensive, non-toxic and biodegradable and has been used as a common disinfectant for thousands of years. But especially if you want to clean your kitchen or your bathroom, you might be wondering about household germs. Yes. It's not as effective as commercial cleaners — but it's still a useful disinfectant.

How does it work? Vinegar is about 5 per cent acetic acid, which kills bacteria and viruses, by destroying their cell structures. Researchers discovered that vinegar killed a range of household pathogens. Science also tells us that vinegar will kill off the flu virus, by rapidly inactivating the flu virus. More recently, researchers found that vinegar efficiently killed the bacteria that causes tuberculosis. Professor Collignon, an infectious diseases physician, says, "TB is a hard-to-kill bacteria, so the fact that it works against them means most other bacteria will likely be killed by vinegar as well." Indeed, it could even be an effective and economical solution to laboratories and hospital settings in resource-poor countries.

In Bulgaria, yoghurt is everywhere. It is the basis of traditional Bulgarian dishes. Yoghurt has a long history in this country. Indeed, the Balkans is one of the many places in the world which has the specific bacteria and temperature ranges needed to naturally produce yoghurt." Wherever it was discovered, what we do know is that Bulgaria played a vital role in introducing yoghurt to the West and turning it into the popular, commercial product we know today.

When we think of yoghurt now, we think of Turkish, Greek or even Icelandic yoghurt. But in the 1920s and '30s, Bulgarian yoghurt was in vogue. But this new demand for Bulgarian yoghurt fundamentally changed the product. Within Bulgaria, although many people continued the tradition of making yoghurt at home, the state takeover of the dairy industry in 1949 led to further changes. Yoghurt became a national icon. But since yoghurt was made in different Bulgarian regions and households, the state had to create one 'authentic' Bulgarian yoghurt.

- 41 What is the passage mainly about?
  - (A) Yoghurt in different Bulgarian regions
  - (B) How to make yoghurt popular, commercial product.
  - (C) Why yoghurt became popular.
  - (D) Bulgarian yoghurt.
