Reading Comprehension: 10% (2 points for each) For generations, people have passed down advice about health and sickness in the form of old wives' tales. But do these folk sayings match up with modern medical knowledge? One such common expression is "Feed a cold, starve a fever." The truth is that both colds and high fevers deplete our bodies of water, and we require nutrients to produce sufficient energy to fight any disease. So you'd be well-advised to drink and eat generously for both of those ailments. A more contemporary warning tells us that watching too much television will cause blindness. This, too, is untrue, say doctors. Spending time glued to the TV might make your brain go soft, but it won't impair your eyes. Speaking of eyesight, how about eating carrots to improve vision? Again, the advice has been discredited. Although the vitamins found in carrots offer valuable nourishment, they won't necessarily improve your eyesight. The rumor was allegedly started during World War II by the British government. They publicly attributed combat pilot success to the consumption of carrots to mask the real reason: the invention of radar. But don't tell that to the carrot farmers. ) The author believes that old wives' tales . . . A) are a humorous way to pass on important medical wisdom.
