Buildings have changed quite a bit in Taiwan over the past few decades. Fifty years ago, many buildings in Taiwan had 1 Chinese style roofs. Nowadays, most Taiwanese people live in Western-style apartment 2. The population of Taiwan is too big for everyone to keep living in Chinese-style buildings. However, there are several public buildings that have been built in the old Chinese style. One such building is Taipei Railway Station.

Traditional buildings follow the 3 of feng shui (wind and water). Feng shui is an ancient Chinese belief that tells us how buildings should be 4. If they are not positioned correctly in relation to water, mountains and other types of terrain, bad luck can result. Feng shui is sometimes used when 5 homes, temples, and even public 6 buildings.

Japan controlled Taiwan for fifty years, so it is not surprising that there are still some Japanese influences on the island. For example, the Taiwanese language still uses many Japanese words. Japanese food is quite popular and many people study Japanese. You might occasionally see an old Japanese-style building. If you're interested in this style of building, A Drop of Water 7 Hall (一滴水紀念館) and Huguo Chan Buddhist 8 of Linji School (臨濟護國禪寺) are good places to visit.

The Dutch and Spanish came even earlier than the Japanese. They invaded Taiwan in the early 1600s, and have left some historic structures. The main feature of
