一、寫作題：共 1 題，100 分

Verbal communication is not limited the exchange of information but includes, as one of its major functions, the shaping of interpersonal relationships. In order to adjust our speech behavior to the communicative purposes at hand, we monitor our speech and observe general principles and specific norms which are subsumed under the concept of politeness. Socially adequate behavior may vary from individual to individual, from language to language, and from culture to culture. Please describe how you speak politely to different individuals (e.g., your parents, your employers, or your friends), how you use different languages (e.g., Chinese, English or other languages/dialects) to express your politeness in conversation, and how significantly you think the cultural backgrounds of different individuals and different languages may influence the notions and the manners of speaking politely in the real-life communicative situations.
