In today's idea-driven economy, the cost of time is what really matters. With the constant pressure to innovate, it makes little sense to waste countless hours 21. So, the most efficient and productive regions are 22 in which people are thinking and working—not sitting in traffic. The auto-dependent transportation system has reached its limit in most major cities and megaregions. Commuting by car is among the least 23 of all our activities—not to mention among the least enjoyable, according to detailed research by the Nobel Prize-winning economist Daniel Kahneman and his colleagues. 24 one might think that the economic crisis beginning in 2007 would have reduced traffic (high unemployment means fewer workers traveling to and from work), the opposite has been true. The fact is that average commutes have 25, and congestion has gotten worse, if anything. The average commute rose in 2008 to 25.5 minutes.

IV. 閱讀測驗 15%: 請根據文章，選出一個最恰當的答案。

Psychological counseling is a process that helps individuals address emotional, mental, and behavioral challenges in their lives. It provides a safe, confidential environment where people can explore their feelings, thoughts, and concerns with the guidance of a trained professional. The goal of counseling is to help individuals gain insight into their problems and develop effective coping strategies to deal with life's difficulties.

Counseling can be beneficial for a wide range of issues, including stress, anxiety, depression, relationship problems, grief, and trauma. It can be used to work through major life transitions, such as divorce or career changes, or to help people manage ongoing conditions like chronic illness or addiction.

There are several types of counseling approaches, each based on different therapeutic theories. Some common types include cognitive-behavioral therapy (CBT), which focuses on changing negative thought patterns, and person-centered therapy, which emphasizes creating a supportive, non-judgmental environment. Counseling sessions typically involve one-on-one meetings, but group counseling and family therapy are also available.
