For the past few weeks, the word "linsanity" has overtaken this country, or even the whole wide world. Jeremy Lin, a Taiwanese-American NBA player, is a rare American born Asian player to make an NBA roster. He even is the first Harvard graduate to play in the NBA since 1954. Lin's story sure has inspired basketball players around the world, and his performance has also caught a lot of media attention. With this sudden rise in popularity, there is always a story behind it. Undoubtedly, Lin's story should be fascinating on many levels. As a Taiwanese, how do you interpret the phenomenon of "Linsanity"? Please illustrate it from your own perspectives.
