2. A. Please translate the following passage made by a historian into Chinese. (20%)

“The cultural nationalisms of recent years, while they make claims to the uniqueness of essentialized national cultures, all have one thing in common: that the unique national cultural is a force of modernization, more precisely, capitalist modernization. Rather than question capitalism with Confucian or other Chinese values, for example, the tendency has been to render it into a value-system conducive to capitalist development. While this has dislodged the claim that only Europeans had the value-system appropriate to capitalism, and has asserted the possibility of multiple paths, the multiple paths are all contained within a teleology of capitalism as the end of history.”
