Question 1-5

China has passed the United States to become the world's biggest energy user, according to the International Energy Agency (IEA). China was bound to overtake the US in terms of total energy consumption sooner or later, and according to IEA calculations, it happened in 2009. One long-term factor behind this development is China's population – more than four times that of the US – with a growing appetite for consumer goods that need energy to use and to manufacture.

The other key reason is China's rapid economic growth, an annual average of 10% over the last two decades, compared with a much slower 2.6% in the United States. Much of China's economic growth has been in industry and construction, which are big energy users.

The timing of China overtaking the US also reflects the global financial crisis, which hit the American economy much harder and so had a bigger impact on the country's energy use. China's new lead in energy consumption is yet another indicator of its growing influence in the global economy especially in international energy markets.

1. What is the best headline for this article?

|---|---|
| (A) China's Economic Growth | (B) Global Energy Consumption |
| (C) China Now World's Biggest Energy User | (D) US and International Energy Markets |
