Read the paragraph below and then answer the questions. Write the letter representing each correct statement on the computer card.

Language and culture teaching has always been considered an important component of applied linguistics. More traditional approaches to teaching, however, rarely took into account learners' linguistic and cultural worlds outside the classroom. Rather, it was assumed that learners entered the classroom as empty vessels to be filled with information about the world. The information itself was thought to consist of immutable, discrete elements that existed independently of individuals' worlds. The process of knowledge acquisition was assumed to be an internally driven one in which the elements were pieced together, unit by unit, in the building of autonomous systems of rules.

1. Applied linguistics is the same as (A. pure; B. theoretical; C. pragmatic; D. practical) linguistics.
2. Traditional approaches were more concerned with (A. internal; B. outside; C. inside; D. integrated) situations.
3. (A. Separate; B. Integrated; C. Complete; D. Empty) elements may contribute more to information.
4. (A. Internally; B. Externally; C. Social culturally; D. Previously) driven process is a good process of knowledge acquisition.
